

Market brings fresh to Tarkiln

In addition to the produce and other items for sale, ready-to-eat meals are available at the market. Here, Martha and Yong Stone prepare a tasty treat for hungry shoppers.

Photos
by Justin Graeber

Sylvia Loring, granddaughter of Edgar W. Loring, one of the first bog managers of Duxbury tries on the Loring Bogs bracelet, designed for DUXFARM by Gail Nathanson of Daylily Designs Studio.

Jeff Bolster of Osprey Seafood in Duxbury shows off the catch of the day

Beverly Jesse and David Cretinon of Cretinon's Farm Stand in Kingston brought oodles of fresh veggies to Tarklin for the inaugural farmers market.

The 4-H Club of Duxbury shows off dolls they made out of corn husks.

It wasn't all about food at the market. Kathleen Looney of Luand Farm in Rockland brought along these fresh, colorful flowers.

Luke Bernier, Eddie and Elanor Everett, with Lynda Everett (in back) from Today's Harvest Organix in Marshfield brought their fresh produce to the market.

Karen Martin, of Le Petit Farmshed of Duxbury, is excited to have a local farmers market in town.

Stephanie and Donna Blischke from the Web of Life farm in Carver were excited to see the turnout at the Duxbury Farmers Market.